THE MORGAN RAID.

An Interesting Letter from One of the Raiders Who was Captured Near Gallipolis.

Gallipolis Bulletin.

As I was an unwilling guest at your city for four days in the latter part of July, 1863, I would like to tell how it happened; and in order to do so, must give a brief history of Morgan's Raid and my participation therein. All the main part of the raid I will pass over briefly, until we reach Buffington Island, and from there until I became a guest—under duress—and from there down the river to Cincinnati, where I escaped to my native Kentucky shore. I would like to give the details. Briefly stated, we started from near Sparta Tenn., on June 28, crossing the Cumberland River July 2 at Burksville, Ky.; crossing the state, reached the Ohio River on July 9th; thence through Indiana to Harrison, in Ohio, passing near Cincinnati; on through Williamsburg, Piketon, Jackson and some other towns, the names of which I have forgotten, until the night of July 18th, we reached the Ohio River at Buffington Island.

Now the details. We reached the bottom near the river about 2 o'clock on the morning of the 19th, where we remained quiet until daybreak. At daybreak we were ordered to throw down the fences and move down the bottom through the fields for a short distance. Here we left our horses and went straight toward the river. There was a very heavy fog prevailing, and you could not see a man twenty steps. At the wagon road on the river bank we came upon some ditches which had just been abandoned, and I suppose hastily, as we found some provisions which we had left. On this road, that ran up and down the river bank, I with three other men were put on picket, and was directed, should we capture any one, to send them to a house that was very near us, where they would be paroled. We had scarcely got settled down until eight men came up to us. These were citizens or militia. We started them to the house, as directed, and the man who went with them had just returned to us when here came eight men. This time they were well armed and well mounted. We never halted them until they were close enough to shake hands with us. We informed them that they were our prisoners. We disarmed them and had just sent them through a pair of draw bars into the barn lot, I remaining alone in the road, when I saw more cavalrymen coming up the road. I let them come within fifty steps, when I halted them.

They all stopped in talking distance I inquired, "Who comes there?" They answered, "Friends." I then said for one of them to advance. There was an officer came forward. I saw from his insignia that his rank was above that of a Captain, but I do not know whether he was a major or a Lieutenant Colonel. When he came up to me the rest of the picket was just coming back. The officer saluted us very politely. He just then discovered his mistake. We informed him that he was our prisoner. He turned his head, looked back at his men; they all began to turn to start back. Then it was that a firing began. They had been passing two of our regiments that were below us on the road. I forgot all about my Major that I had a prisoner; left him sitting on his horse, and I suppose he got away without any trouble. At this time there were some gunboats just below us. They came up and began to throw shell over us, but did us no harm. We had captured some of the Union forces here, and the prisoners claimed that they had a large force. So, after they had fallen back they soon rallied and came back at us. We now went back to our horses by this time the fog had cleared up and we could see we had quite a force against us. They drove us back until we had passed the road where we had come in the night before. This left us no road by which to go out, so we went up a very steep hill, through the woods. After passing over this hill we struck a road that led us to the river some miles above where we had the battle. Here we met with two gunboats, but they did not fire on us, nor we on them. We again left the river, and stopped until night. When night came we again started and made a hard night's ride, and the next day we were going down the river. In the afternoon we were overtaken by the Federal cavalry, and we had a running fight for about four or five miles, when we reached the river bottom at Cheshire. There we turned down the river with the Federal cavalry almost mixed up with us. There was a road down the bottom, and a bridge across a ravine or creek. Here we had to make a stand and fight while we could cross the bridge. When it came my time to cross the bridge and I had reached the other side, I saw that we were cut off, as there were eight regiments of cavalry in the bottom below us.

Our men had up a flag of truce, which was an unconditional surrender. I spoke to a man with whom I was acquainted, and told him to follow me up a hill. We started up this hill and there were about one hundred men followed us, but we thought we would stand a better chance to make our way back in a small crowd. So we left these men and traveled through the woods. We went to a house about dark and got something to eat. The next night we did the same; also the third night we got supper, and the old gentleman gave us directions, after we had eaten our supper, how we could get to Jackson. We told the old gent that we were Indiana Militia, but he knew better, I think, and I suspected the old fellow of being at least half way friendly to us. But that night we missed the road that he had directed us, and the next day we were captured by some militia about nine miles from Gallipolis. We had stopped in the big woods before daylight, on the roadside, and we overslept ourselves. A young lady came along on horseback, which aroused us up. We then went on the road for a short distance and then went into the woods. I came back to the road, watched up and down for awhile. I then ventured over into a field and got a few bundles of oats, taking them out to our horses, and we then went to sleep; but about noon we were awakened by the militia who had got track of us. We were treated very nicely, taken to the house of one of the crowd, and given a good dinner. That evening we were taken to Gallipolis, where we found a few more of Morgan's men who had been picked up just as we were. Then there was a few more brought in, until our number was twenty. On the fourth day after we had been taken to Gallipolis, there were eight steamboats at the wharf and being loaded with Federal cavalry to be sent down the river. We, the prisoners, were put aboard of the first boat to start out. On this boat was a part of the 17th Illinois Mounted Infantry. The next day we reached Cincinnati, and the boats, after anchoring for a while in the middle of the river, finally landed on the Kentucky side, at Covington. There I planned and made a successful escape while the troops were being unloaded, the details of which are interesting enough to me, but might not interest your readers. My reason for escape is I did not like quite so much restraint, and I found it very unpleasant to be under guard.

DEMOCRATS ARE PLEASED.

Think the Republican Program is Certain to Help Them.

Pittsburg Post.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—Democrats here, from members of the cabinet down, express decided satisfaction at the prospect that the Republicans next year will control the presidential campaign on the issue outlined by Senator Sherman and Governor McKinley in their speeches made at Springfield, O., yesterday. Clearly it is the sentiment of Democrats in Washington that nothing could be more for their party than that the Republicans should next year incorporate in their national platform Senator Sherman's declaration for another complete revision of the tariff, to be undertaken as soon as the Republicans get control of the presidency and the two houses of congress. Democrats feel that in the slightest hesitation among the business men of the country as to which party they would give their adhesion. A reopening of the tariff agitation in the in the Fifty-fifth congress would mean an immediate stoppage of the great business and industrial boom, which under the Wilson tariff has already brought on an era of prosperity almost equal to that which the McKinley bill destroyed.

The threat of renewed tariff agitation if incorporated in the platform of one of the great parties it is felt would cause hesitation and disquiet in the business world; and it is believed this will so speedily be made clear to the would-be agitators that the McKinley program will have to be reversed before the Republican national convention meets.

Little doubt seems to be entertained here that Sherman's declaration for another tariff revision will meet a chilling reception by Republicans outside of Ohio. It is certain that Mr. Reed and his friends will echo the cry. A gentleman who saw Mr. Reed not long ago in his Main retreat represents him as feeling exceedingly anxious to avoid tariff agitation in the coming session of Congress and desirous that no legislation of a general character should be attempted. This gentleman gave it as his belief that Mr. Reed would be only too glad to avoid taking the speakership altogether, if he could do so, as he realizes that in the present sensitive state of the country congress will be watched with jealous keenness, and any action tending to disturb returning prosperity will be vigorously resented by the voters next fall. Mr. Reed feels that he, as speaker of the house, will be held accountable for everything done by that body this winter, and if mistakes are made he will be made to suffer for it before the Republican national convention.
